CAPT. ROBERT B. PESCOD. Our fellow-townsmen, P. F. Pescud, his mother and other friends, have been in the greatest gloom and painful anxiety for the past six weeks, owing to the non-arrival of the Caura, 'commanded by his brother,'; R. B. Pescud, and their fears have been increased by the report of Capt Howes, Ship Scargc, recently arrived at Boston from Calcutta, who reports passing a vessel on fire on the night of the of December last in lat. 34, long. 69. Capt. Howes says he first saw the light about P. M. He made for it, and at 12 o'clock was abreast of the burning wreck, and heard screams for help to windward until four o'clock : at that time he could distinctly hear the poor creatures exclaiming, "for God's sake save us, then all was still. The billows ran so high, that he was afraid to lower his bat, notwithstanding his mate and several of the crew volunteered to man it, and try to save; the sufferers. He, however, sailed to and fro, and burnt blue lights all night hoping a raft or boat' might drift near'-him. Next morning he discovered that the surface of the water was covered with oil. He saw a number of casks of Wine, boxes of Lemons', and empty square Tin Cans, in the wake of the burning vessel, and as the Caura should have been in about that latitude at that time, was loaded with Olive Oil, Wine, and Lemons, and as no other vessel having a similar cargo is missing, the owners of the Caura and the underwriters feel almost sure the burning vessel was the Caura, which is now past due 50 days. The only hope entertained for the safety of the crew is that they may have been saved by Barque, which Capt. Howes reports as having seen near the wreck all night, but which he could not speak, and months may elapse before any thing is known. Capt. Pescud was the youngest son of the late Col. Edward Pescud of Petersburg, Va. He was beloved by all who knew him for his amiable and generous nature. We hope he is not lost, but that he may have been rescued by the Barque. Capt. Pescud was for many years in command of a Clipper Barque from Baltimore in the west coast Pacific trade. He went to California soon after the settlement of that country, and amassed a fortune, which he converted into gold, expecting to leave for Virginia in a day or two, when the memorable fire which occurred 6th May, communicated with the hotel where his treasure was deposited (while he was settling with his commission merchant) and he lost everything but the clothes he had on. He again shipped as mate of a Clipper bound for Calcutta, and ever since has been in the command of vessels in the Rio and Mediterranean trade. We sincerely hope his friends may have favorable news of his safety very soon.

Occupation: Teacher. Education: Woodrow Wilson High School in Portsmouth, VA; St. Mary's Junior College in Raleigh, UNC in Chapel Hill, Old Dominion University. Religion: Episcopal.

Louise Albertson DeVere, 56, of Athens, Ga. died Sunday, November 19, while touring St. Paul's Cathedral in the Vatican. At the time of her death, she was teaching for the Navy's PACE program aboard the U.S.S. George Washington, which was in port in Naples.

Born in Portsmouth, Va., she was graduated from Woodrow Wilson High School. Louise studied at St. Mary's Junior College, Raleigh, and at U.N.C.-Chapel Hill before completing her B.A. and M.A. degrees in English at Old Dominion University. While taking graduate courses toward her doctorate at Emory University, she worked on the Linguistic Atlas of the United States. Her teaching career began at Augusta College and continued at the University of Georgia at Athens until she returned to Portsmouth to teach at Tidewater Community College and at Commonwealth College. She was cofounder and editor of Olde Times Magazine in Portsmouth for several years.

She served on the boards of The Descendants of Peter Francisco and of The Order of Cape Henry, 1607, and she was a founding member of the Portsmouth Chapter of the O.D.U. Alumni Association.

Louise had returned to Georgia in 1997, where she worked for a year as Director of the Elbert County Adult Literacy Program. For the past several years, she lived in Athens but spent more of her time abroad, teaching PACE English courses for Central Texas College. Perhaps her life might be best characterized by Chaucer's words: "Gladly would she learn, and gladly teach."

She is survived by two daughters, Susan Brooker DeVere of Athens, Ga. and Yvonne Louise DeVere of Lexington, Ga., and by her brother Robert Brooke Albertson of Portsmouth. She was preceded in death by both parents, Robert Brooke and Louise Gaither Albertson.

71. Fay Martin. Born ca 1922. Fay died on 3 Mar 2015; she was 93. Occupation: Artist. Education: Sweet Briar College.

Of Cambridge, MA in 1997

In 1960, Fay Chandler was “Approaching Forty,” as she announced in the title of her first self-portrait, painted that year.

“I thought the time had come for me to learn to pray,” she later wrote, and that spiritual longing brought her to the philosophy of Paul Tillich, whose writings inspired her to want to look at life more closely.

Becoming an artist in her late 30s was a way of sharply observing the world.

“Night Out” was one of Mrs. Chandler’s works.

“I’m still learning to see,” she wrote more than a half-century later in an autobiographical sketch for The Art Connection, a nonprofit she helped found in 1995. “I’ve come to feel that, in a sense, my paintings are my prayers. I don’t understand them, but the process makes them real to me.”

For more than 50 years she distilled life’s experiences into works of acrylic, charcoal, ink, oils, pastels, watercolors, and enamel spray paint, sometimes in combinations. She also assembled small figurative constructions from objects friends gave her or items plucked from trash others tossed.

“In the paintings, people are amorphous, wiggly blobs that fit together like pieces of a jigsaw puzzle,” Globe art critic Christine Temin wrote of Mrs. Chandler’s work in 1986. “In the constructions, little metal thingamajigs line up like anonymous attendees at a cocktail party or a political rally where everybody thinks the same way. The images are goofy, but they’re also refined.”

“Rainy Day” was another work produced by Mrs. Chandler.

Eight years ago, after her husband died, Mrs. Chandler moved from their Cambridge home into a converted Brighton firehouse. Officially, her studio was on the upper level of two floors connected by a compact elevator, and her bed was below, but works she created were never more than a stride from wherever she stood or slept. Mrs. Chandler kept painting in her artist’s quarters until going into St. Elizabeth’s Medical Center in Brighton a couple of days before she died March 3, at 92, of complications from a heart attack.

An enlivening figure among Boston artists since the early 1970s, when she began painting in a Boston Center for the Arts studio in the South End, Mrs. Chandler also took a singular path toward supporting the arts.

“I think you would have to say she has been a pivotal figure in arts philanthropy in this city,” said Paul S. Grogan, president of The Boston Foundation. “Certainly she was one of the most active and generous of donors.”

Mrs. Chandler created “Winter’s Approaching.”

She gave away more than $1 million annually, spreading donations among more than 200 organizations over the years, including many in areas other than the arts. Mrs. Chandler’s impact reached far beyond those agencies, however, when she and a few friends launched The Art Connection. The nonprofit invites officials from organizations, along with patients or clients they serve, to choose from among hundreds of works artists donate. Their choices are then displayed free in the agencies. Since its inception, The Art Connection has placed 6,745 works by 409 artists in 369 agencies.

“She really was the heart and soul of what we do,” said Susan Collings, executive director of The Art Connection, which is based in Boston and has sister sites across the country and in South Africa. “It’s such a win-win both for the artists who want to find a home for their work and the recipient agencies that are absolutely delighted to make the selection.”

Mrs. Chandler “believed that art could ignite hope and save lives, and she was right,” said her longtime friend Swanee Hunt, a former US ambassador to Austria who is a philanthropist and public policy lecturer at the Harvard Kennedy School.

“She would often make the point that most people go through their whole lives without direct exposure to art,” Grogan said of Mrs. Chandler, “and she was going to fix that for an awful lot of organizations, and she did so.”

The younger of two sisters, Fay Martin grew up in Norfolk, Va., in a family of integrationists. Her father was a banker, and an uncle and a grandfather each served as the city’s mayor. She graduated from Sweet Briar College, a couple of hundred miles west, where she studied sociology. During World War II, she met Alfred DuPont Chandler Jr. They married in 1944 and he became a respected historian of American business, teaching at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Johns Hopkins University, and Harvard Business School. In 1978, he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for his book “The Visible Hand: The Managerial Revolution in American Business.”

“Luck does count,” he wrote in 1965 as he described his life in an anniversary report of his Harvard class, and added: “My greatest piece of luck, however, came long ago when Fay Martin agreed to marriage.”

The Chandlers lived in Brookline while he taught at MIT, but Mrs. Chandler found her calling when he moved to Johns Hopkins. She graduated with a master of fine arts in painting from the Maryland Institute College of Art.

“Someone asked her to do a self-portrait,” said her son Alfred “Appy” Chandler III of Rowley. “She was just beginning to read Kierkegaard and all the great Protestant philosophers. She did this painting, which is a skeleton filled with sentences.”

That was “Approaching Forty,” a work winking with wry humor, such as the title of a book by the skeleton’s hand: “Six Easy Steps to A Pleasant Life.” During her career, she had numerous shows at galleries and museums including Danforth Art in Framingham, where she was honored at a reception last fall.

“Her art was totally quirky,” said Clara Wainwright, an artist and a founder of Boston’s First Night celebration. “She liked to make assemblages that brought diverse things together, and I think that’s the way her life was: She liked to bring all kinds of people together.”

Wainwright added that Mrs. Chandler “was just a model for the way to live. She enjoyed life to the hilt, and I’m sure Fay didn’t have an enemy in the world. It’s very hard to say that of most people.”

“She was poetically plainspoken,” said Hunt, who recalled bringing items to Mrs. Chandler “like broken plastic spoons or hair curlers, and they would appear in her next piece of art. She had that kind of imagination.”

A service will be announced for Mrs. Chandler, who in addition to her son leaves two daughters, Alpine “Dougie” Chandler Bird of Annapolis, Md., and Mary “Mimi” Chandler Watt of Dinas Powys, Wales; another son, Howard of Cambridge; five grandchildren; two step-grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren.

Mrs. Chandler “was in many ways a straightforward and uncomplicated person,” her son Appy said. “She loved to walk barefoot. She liked to be direct.”

Near her functional single bed, which was only partly guarded by standing screens, a sign over a doorway informed visitors: “If you’re not barefoot then you’re overdressed.” She often dined at Big Daddy’s, a pizza joint a few steps from the converted firehouse, where one of her paintings adorns a wall.

After losing sight in one eye about a decade ago, Mrs. Chandler sported an eye patch, which delighted children and her adult friends as well.

“All of my life, I’ve been sort of an oddball,” she said in a 2012 interview with Sweet Briar College Magazine, a publication of her alma mater. “I think it’s just been my life to be that way and not really mind it.”

On Sunday mornings Hunt picked up Mrs. Chandler, clad in a hat and three scarves, and they drove with the top down to and from services at the Bethel AME Church in Jamaica Plain.

“It was so much fun,” Hunt said. “On the way home, she would deliver a sermon to me. As you can imagine, she would be shouting over the traffic. She would be shouting about whether she believed in God, and saying, ‘I’m not sure God cares, one way or another.’ ”

In 1944 when Fay was 22, she married Alfred DuPont Chandler Jr. Born on 15 Sep 1918 in Guyencourt, DE. Alfred DuPont died in May 2007; he was 88.
