Edith told me several years ago about the scandal with Siemon after the Civil War. Dr. Ben's sister Susan went to live with Dr. Ben after her husband Edward Pescud died. Siemon returned home, back to Horseshoe Farm, wounded from the Civil War, in the spring of 1865. Susan nursed Siemon back to health, PLUS, fell in love with him. Long story short, Susan was old enough to be his mother, the two eloped, the family flipped out, forced Siemon to leave for good and Susan died of a broken heart.

CAPT. ROBERT B. PESCOD. Our fellow-townsmen, P. F. Pescud, his mother and other friends, have been in the greatest gloom and painful anxiety for the past six weeks, owing to the non-arrival of the Caura, 'commanded by his brother,'; R. B. Pescud, and their fears have been increased by the report of Capt Howes, Ship Scargc, recently arrived at Boston from Calcutta, who reports passing a vessel on fire on the night of the 6th of December last in lat. 34, long. 69. Capt. Howes says he first saw the light about P. M. He made for it, and at 12 o'clock was abreast of the burning wreck, and heard screams for help to windward until four o'clock : at that time he could distinctly hear the poor creatures exclaiming, "for God's sake save us, then all was still. The billows ran so high, that he was afraid to lower his bat, notwithstanding his mate and several of the crew volunteered to man it, and try to save; the sufferers. He, however, sailed to and fro, and burnt blue lights all night hoping a raft or boat' might drift near-him. Next morning he discovered that the surface of the water was covered with oil. He saw a number of casks of Wine, boxes of Lemons', and empty square Tin Cans, in the wake of the burning vessel, and as the Caura should have been in about that latitude at that time, was loaded with Olive Oil, Wine, and Lemons, and as no other vessel having a similar cargo is missing, the owners of the Caura and the underwriters feel almost sure the burning vessel was the Caura, which is now past due 50 days. The only hope entertained for the safety of the crew is that they may have been saved by Barque, which Capt. Howes reports as having seen near the wreck all night, but which he could not speak, and months may elapse before any thing is known. Capt. Pescud was the youngest son of the late Col. Edward Pescud of Petersburg, Va. He was beloved by all who knew him for his amiable and generous nature. We hope he is not lost, but that he may have been rescued by the Barque. Capt. Pescud was for many years in command of a Clipper Barque from Baltimore in the west coast Pacific trade. He went to California soon after the settlement of that country, and amassed a fortune, which he converted into gold, expecting to leave for Virginia in a day or two, when the memorable fire which occurred 6th May, communicated with the hotel where his treasure was deposited (while he was settling with his commission merchant) and he lost everything but the clothes he had on. He again shipped as mate of a Clipper bound for Calcutta, and ever since has been in the command of vessels in the Rio and Mediterranean trade. We sincerely hope his friends may have favorable news of his safety very soon.

In 1960, Fay Chandler was “Approaching Forty,” as she announced in the title of her first self-portrait, painted that year.

“I thought the time had come for me to learn to pray,” she later wrote, and that spiritual longing brought her to the philosophy of Paul Tillich, whose writings inspired her to want to look at life more closely.

Becoming an artist in her late 30s was a way of sharply observing the world.

“Night Out” was one of Mrs. Chandler’s works.

“I’m still learning to see,” she wrote more than a half-century later in an autobiographical sketch for The Art Connection, a nonprofit she helped found in 1995. “I’ve come to feel that, in a sense, my paintings are my prayers. I don’t understand them, but the process makes them real to me.”

For more than 50 years she distilled life’s experiences into works of acrylic, charcoal, ink, oils, pastels, watercolors, and enamel spray paint, sometimes in combinations. She also assembled small figurative constructions from objects friends gave her or items plucked from trash others tossed.

“In the paintings, people are amorphous, wiggly blobs that fit together like pieces of a jigsaw puzzle,” Globe art critic Christine Temin wrote of Mrs. Chandler’s work in 1986. “In the constructions, little metal thingamajigs line up like anonymous attendees at a cocktail party or a political rally where everybody thinks the same way. The images are goofy, but they’re also refined.”

“Rainy Day” was another work produced by Mrs. Chandler.

Eight years ago, after her husband died, Mrs. Chandler moved from their Cambridge home into a converted Brighton firehouse. Officially, her studio was on the upper level of two floors connected by a compact elevator, and her bed was below, but works she created were never more than a stride from wherever she stood or slept. Mrs. Chandler kept painting in her artist’s quarters until going into St. Elizabeth’s Medical Center in Brighton a couple of days before she died March 3, at 92, of complications from a heart attack.

An enlivening figure among Boston artists since the early 1970s, when she began painting in a Boston Center for the Arts studio in the South End, Mrs. Chandler also took a singular path toward supporting the arts.

“I think you would have to say she has been a pivotal figure in arts philanthropy in this city,” said Paul S. Grogan, president of The Boston Foundation. “Certainly she was one of the most active and generous of donors.”

Mrs. Chandler created “Winter’s Approaching.”

She gave away more than $1 million annually, spreading donations among more than 200 organizations over the years, including many in areas other than the arts. Mrs. Chandler’s impact reached far beyond those agencies, however, when she and a few friends launched The Art Connection. The nonprofit invites officials from organizations, along with patients or clients they serve, to choose from among hundreds of works artists donate. Their choices are then displayed free in the agencies. Since its inception, The Art Connection has placed 6,745 works by 409 artists in 369 agencies.

“She really was the heart and soul of what we do,” said Susan Collings, executive director of The Art Connection, which is based in Boston and has sister sites across the country and in South Africa. “It’s such a win-win both for the artists who want to find a home for their work and the recipient agencies that are absolutely delighted to make the selection.”

Mrs. Chandler “believed that art could ignite hope and save lives, and she was right,” said her longtime friend Swanee Hunt, a former US ambassador to Austria who is a philanthropist and public policy lecturer at the Harvard Kennedy School.

“She would often make the point that most people go through their whole lives without direct exposure to art,” Grogan said of Mrs. Chandler, “and she was going to fix that for an awful lot of organizations, and she did so.”

The younger of two sisters, Fay Martin grew up in Norfolk, Va., in a family of integrationists. Her father was a banker, and an uncle and a grandfather each served as the city’s mayor. She graduated from Sweet Briar College, a couple of hundred miles west, where she studied sociology. During World War II, she met Alfred DuPont Chandler Jr. They married in 1944 and he became a respected historian of American business, teaching at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Johns Hopkins University, and Harvard Business School. In 1978, he was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for his book “The Visible Hand: The Managerial Revolution in American Business.”

“Luck does count,” he wrote in 1965 as he described his life in an anniversary report of his Harvard class, and added: “My greatest piece of luck, however, came long ago when Fay Martin agreed to marriage.” The Chandlers lived in Brookline while he taught at MIT, but Mrs. Chandler found her calling when he moved to Johns Hopkins. She graduated with a master of fine arts in painting from the Maryland Institute College of Art.

“Someone asked her to do a self-portrait,” said her son Alfred “Appy” Chandler III of Rowley. “She was just beginning to read Kierkegaard and all the great Protestant philosophers. She did this painting, which is a skeleton filled with sentences.”

That was “Approaching Forty,” a work winking with wry humor, such as the title of a book by the skeleton’s hand: “Six Easy Steps to A Pleasant Life.” During her career, she had numerous shows at galleries and museums including Danforth Art in Framingham, where she was honored at a reception last fall.

“Her art was totally quirky,” said Clara Wainwright, an artist and a founder of Boston’s First Night celebration. “She liked to make assemblages that brought diverse things together, and I think that’s the way her life was: She liked to bring all kinds of people together.”

Wainwright added that Mrs. Chandler “was just a model for the way to live. She enjoyed life to the hilt, and I’m sure Fay didn’t have an enemy in the world. It’s very hard to say that of most people.”

“She was poetically plainspoken,” said Hunt, who recalled bringing items to Mrs. Chandler “like broken plastic spoons or hair curlers, and they would appear in her next piece of art. She had that kind of imagination.”

A service will be announced for Mrs. Chandler, who in addition to her son leaves two daughters, Alpine “Dougie” Chandler Bird of Annapolis, Md., and Mary “Mimi” Chandler Watt of Dinas Powys, Wales; another son, Howard of Cambridge; five grandchildren; two step-grandchildren; and six great-grandchildren.

Mrs. Chandler “was in many ways a straightforward and uncomplicated person,” her son Appy said. “She loved to walk barefoot. She liked to be direct.”

Near her functional single bed, which was only partly guarded by standing screens, a sign over a doorway informed visitors: “If you’re not barefoot then you’re overdressed.” She often dined at Big Daddy’s, a pizza joint a few steps from the converted firehouse, where one of her paintings adorns a wall.

After losing sight in one eye about a decade ago, Mrs. Chandler sported an eye patch, which delighted children and her adult friends as well.

“All of my life, I’ve been sort of an oddball,” she said in a 2012 interview with Sweet Briar College Magazine, a publication of her alma mater. “I think it’s just been my life to be that way and not really mind it.”

On Sunday mornings Hunt picked up Mrs. Chandler, clad in a hat and three scarves, and they drove with the top down to and from services at the Bethel AME Church in Jamaica Plain.

“It was so much fun,” Hunt said. “On the way home, she would deliver a sermon to me. As you can imagine, she would be shouting over the traffic. She would be shouting about whether she believed in God, and saying, ‘I’m not sure God cares, one way or another.’”

Spouse: Alfred DuPont Chandler Jr. (15 Sep 1918-May 2007)
Birth: 15 Sep 1918, Guyencourt, DE
Death: May 2007
Occupation: Economic Historian
Education: Phillips Exeter Academy in NH; Harvard, Class of 1940
Marriage: 1944

Alfred D. Chandler Jr., an economic historian who revolutionized the writing of business history, shunning the old debate about whether tycoons are good or bad, and instead arguing persuasively in almost two dozen books that it was the emergence of professional management that propelled modern capitalism, died on May 9 in Cambridge, Mass. He was 88.

Stuart Cahill, 2005

Alfred D. Chandler Jr.

Jim Aisner, a spokesman for Harvard Business School, where Dr. Chandler had taught, announced the death.

Fortune Magazine last year called Dr. Chandler “America’s pre-eminent business historian,” saying that for a long-term perspective on the Fortune 500, the magazine’s ranking of the biggest corporations, “there’s really only one person to ask.”

Before Dr. Chandler, the bulk of business histories were morality plays that portrayed executives as heroic or damnable. He helped redirect the field toward dispassionate analysis of the anatomy of business. He emphasized the transformative power of technology as railroads and the telegraph spawned big business. These corporations needed what Mr. Chandler called “a new subspecies of economic man — the salaried manager.”

The salaried manager represented a new concept: a manager could possess management expertise independent of the content of what he was managing. Unlike the traditional entrepreneur, he need have no stake in the company he managed.

Dr. Chandler developed this theme most famously in “The Visible Hand: The Managerial Revolution in American Business” (1977), which won the Pulitzer Prize for history and the Bancroft Prize. His thesis was that managers, functioning as a “visible hand,” had replaced the “invisible hand” of Adam Smith’s free market in allocating resources.

This new emphasis on organizational structure so transformed the field of business history that some call the period before Dr. Chandler’s publications “B.C.,” meaning before Chandler. Glenn Porter wrote in 1992 in “The Rise of Big Business, 1860-1920”: “Virtually every work now written on the history of modern, large-scale enterprise must begin by placing itself within the Chandlerian analytical framework.” Dr. Chandler’s work was distinguished by an intellectual rigor he gleaned from the sociologist Talcott Parsons, one of his professors at Harvard. Dr. Chandler rigorously compared earlier and later time frames to see what changed, and, more important, what caused the change. He likened the process to a controlled scientific experiment.

His conclusions jolted conventional wisdom. For example, he said that America’s industrial revolution did not start in New England mills, but with the beginning of large-scale mining of anthracite coal fields in Pennsylvania in the 1830s and 1840s. This new power source replaced water, wood and charcoal, facilitating the making of iron and metal products.

Alfred du Pont Chandler Jr. was born in Guyencourt, Del., on Sept. 15, 1918. Although he was not a blood relation of the du Ponts who founded the chemical company, his great-grandmother was raised by the du Ponts after her parents died of yellow fever.

Alfred spent his first five years in Buenos Aires, where his father represented an American locomotive company. When he was 11, the family moved back to the United States and settled near Wilmington. Family lore has it that the boy announced his intention to become a historian by the time he was 7. He was inspired by Wilbur Fisk Gordy’s book “An Elementary History of the United States,” a primer for sixth-graders his father gave him. He read it 19 times.

At Phillips Exeter Academy, he won a prize for excellence in history. In 1940, he graduated magna cum laude from Harvard, where generations of his family had studied, beginning in the 18th century. During World War II, he served in the Navy, interpreting intelligence photos.

He enrolled as a graduate student at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill to study Southern regional history. But he became captivated by sociology, and returned to Harvard to study with Mr. Parsons.

He stumbled on his dissertation topic in old papers on the history of American railroads written by his great-grandfather, a founder of the financial-data company that became Standard & Poor’s. The dissertation became a book, “Henry Varnum Poor: Business Editor, Analyst and Reformer” (1956).

From 1950 to 1963, Dr. Chandler taught at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he helped edit the letters of Theodore Roosevelt and wrote “Strategy and Structure,” which used General Motors, DuPont, Exxon and Sears, Roebuck to develop his ideas on how companies employ organization structure to further strategy.

Dr. Chandler taught at Johns Hopkins, where he edited the papers of President Dwight D. Eisenhower, then joined the faculty of Harvard Business School from which he retired in 1989. He was editor of the Harvard Studies in Business History.

He was a visiting professor at Oxford and elsewhere, and president of the Economic History Association and the Business History Conference. He was a member of the American Philosophical Society and a fellow of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences.

Dr. Chandler is survived by his wife, the former Fay Martin; his daughters, Alpine (Dougie) Chandler Bird, of Annapolis, Md., and Mary (Mimi) Chandler Watt, of Dinas Powys, Wales; his son, Howard, of Maharishi Vedic City, Iowa.; his sisters Nina Murray, of Bedford, Mass., and Nantucket, and Sophie Consagra, of Manhattan; five grandchildren and two step-grandchildren; and one great-grandchild.

Dr. Chandler fancied a glass of sherry with lunch before retiring to write on yellow-lined paper in small, cramped letters. Though he did not use a computer, he gave characteristic thought to its impact on economic change.

"All I know is that the commercializing of the Internet is transforming the world," he said in an interview with Newsweek last year.

Correction: May 15, 2007

An obituary on Saturday about the economic historian Alfred D. Chandler Jr. misspelled part of the name of the place of residence of his daughter Mary (Mimi) Chandler Watt. It is Dinas Powys, Wales, not Dina.

While at Wake Forest, he played on the men's tennis team, and was a member of Kappa Alpha fraternity and Phi Beta Kappa Academic Honor Society. In addition, he served as basketball statistician for the legendary coach Horace "Bones" McKinney. After graduation, Zeno taught economics at Purdue University and the University of South Carolina. In the 1970's he returned to Wake Forest as the business manager in the Athletic Department. Subsequently he founded Voyager Travel in Winston-Salem where he worked for 20 years until retirement. Zeno's lifetime love of Wake Forest was manifested in his ongoing generosity to the university, and in particular to its athletic programs. A member of the Deacon Club for 37 years, he was also a member of its highest giving level, the Moricle Society, for 13 years, giving the equivalent of a full scholarship to Wake Forest. At various times, he served on the Deacon Club Board of Directors, the Hall of Fame Selection Committee, and the Basketball Executive Committee. In addition, Zeno established three other scholarships: The Zeno Martin College Scholarship Fund, the Zeno Martin Punter/Placekicker Scholarship, and the Zeno Martin Tennis Scholarship Fund. He was proud to sponsor three All-Americans among his group of scholarship recipients. A visible testimony to his generosity to Wake Forest is the Zeno Martin Residence Hall, located in the northwestern quadrant of the campus, and dedicated to the memory of his father. Zeno was well known for his giving heart and his concern for those less fortunate. Among the many recipients of his substantial donations are the Saint Jude's Children's Hospital in Memphis, Tennessee, the Wounded Warriors Project, and the Memorial Sloan-Kettering Cancer Center. Zeno was predeceased by his parents, Margaret C. and Zeno Martin, Sr. He is survived by his friend, Kenneth S. Halik, whom he mentored and guided, and for whom he acted as a life coach.

Molly became an elementary school teacher while Spike was working in his new insurance career. Two years later Spike was transferred by St. Paul/Travelers to Portland, Oregon, where Molly taught in nearby Garden Home, and their daughter Beth would soon be born.

They moved to Spokane in 1964, Spike having been promoted to marketing manager. Knowing no one, the three of them (plus German Shepherd, "Freddy") arrived to three feet of snow and moved into their Stone Street house. Molly often pointed out that Spokane's airport was then an aging quonset hut with a leaking roof where water dripped on her as she stood at the United ticket counter. They assumed it would mercifully only be for a few years before they could return to California. How wrong they were! They soon fell in love with the Spokane area and were swept up into the community.

Molly was a Girl Scout leader as Beth and Laurie were growing up, and she and Spike helped start the Rockwood Chapter of Spokane Symphony Associates (SSA).

Thanks in large part to Appy Chandler, the Great Marsh Conservation Initiative was able to save 75 acres of beautiful salt marsh, coastal woodland, and tidal creeks in October of 2011. When the 75 acres of priority habitat were threatened, Appy stepped in. He played an invaluable role in ensuring that a conservation opportunity for the land could happen when the longtime owner was threatened with foreclosure.

The legacy of Professor Alfred D. Chandler lives on through the conservation spirit shared by his son and family. And through Rough Meadows Wildlife Sanctuary, the conservation legacy of the Chandlers will exist forever as a permanent part of the land and water, diverse wildlife, and extraordinary beauty of the Great Marsh.

When Mark and Heather Kline bought their vacation home in Punta Gorda in 2007, both were employed in their native Chicago. Mark owned a tree and landscape business, and Heather taught third grade. After an exceptionally cold and windy winter, they decided to leave Chicago permanently. But they needed jobs.

The couple bought Holiday Boat Rentals, at the marina in Fishermen's Village in Punta Gorda in November 2012. Indeed, it's a perfect business because they are very knowledgeable, and have always owned a boat.
